

Scope¹

Since the turn of the 21st century, the new interdisciplinary field of Religion and Development established itself with the emergence of a growing corpus of literature investigating the manifold relationships and interactions of religion and development. Those publications are of cross-disciplinary interest, with research spanning from religious studies and theology to anthropology, regional studies, sociology, politics, economics and development studies. At the same time, research about religion and development is moving in a highly transdisciplinary space, in which governments, international organisations, development agencies, non-governmental organisations and religious communities and organisations engage in the generation of knowledge on the subject jointly with academic actors. Religion & Development (R&D) seeks to contribute to this field by publishing original, peer-reviewed research as well as in-depth, peer reviewed reflections from policy and practice. R&D is transdisciplinary and welcomes contributions from across the social sciences and humanities as well as from practice and policy. In this journal, both religion and development are understood in a wide sense. Religion encompasses all forms of institutions, organisations, communities, networks, movements, scenes, cultures, beliefs, practices and activities that can be described as religious, including those which take up the function of religion or which espouse similar normative, ideological claims. R&D has a multi-religious scope not limited to any specific faith tradition. Development is taken as a marker for manifold processes of social, economic, ecological, political and cultural dynamics, change and transformation. Within this framework, the 17 Sustainable Development Goals are one important point of reference. The marker “development” hence serves to encompass all the realms covered by the SDGs and includes contributions relating to one or more of the dimensions of the SDGs (e.g. gender, ecology, economy, inequality, social services etc.). References to development can be explicit or implicit. Moreover, the journal invites contributions that critically engage with the ideological prerequisites and concepts of development, for example in the framework of post-development thinking and discourse, theorising and conceptualisation of alternatives to development, and development alternatives. Lastly, development stands for a policy and practice field in which international organisations, governments, development agencies, humanitarian agencies, private enterprises, non-governmental organisations, religious communities and organisations, individuals and other actors engage in numerous practices, activities, projects, programmes and so forth.

Instructions for Authors

Regarding the scope of contributions published in R&D, this opens up several possible lines of inquiry. A first line of inquiry asks for the contribution of religion to processes of (sustainable) development. What is the (positive or negative) role of religion and religious communities for development in different contexts across the globe?

A second line of inquiry follows the critical approaches in the field seeking to provide a space to move beyond instrumental or functional approaches. The journal intends to challenge dominant, secular development paradigms by exploring religious notions of development and juxtaposing them with those in the mainstream development discourse. What are the notions of development or alternatives to them brought forward by religious communities? R&D opens up a space for debating the arguments coming from a post-development perspective criticising and questioning the term, the notion, the policies and the practices of development altogether.

Third, the journal serves as an important forum for the practical side of religion and development. This will include in-depth analyses of the work of religious actors in the social, economic, ecological and political realms – covering their activities, their structures, their effectiveness and so forth. How do religious actors operate in the development field? How are religious communities involved in development cooperation? What are the tensions in the practical application of religions in development?

Fourth, looking ahead to the year 2030, the question naturally arises as to whether there will be a new global development agenda to replace or augment the Sustainable Development Goals and what the implications of the religion and development debate would be for such an agenda. R&D therefore not only seeks to describe the world as it has been but to actively contribute to shaping the future of development or post-development alternatives by providing a space for discussing the implications of the religion and development debate for a possible post-2030 development agenda.

Open Access

R&D is a fully Open Access journal, which means that all content is freely accessible online. Articles published in Open Access can therefore be expected to receive substantially higher numbers of views and citations, including notably by non-academic audiences.

All articles in R&D are published under a non-exclusive Open Access license (CC-BY 4.0). The author(s) keep full copyright and give Brill permission to publish by signing a special Brill Open Consent to Publish. The Brill Open Consent to Publish will be sent to you by the responsible desk-editor. For more information on Brill Open go to: brill.com/brillopen or contact brillopen@brill.com.

R&D is dependent on Article Processing Charges to cover the costs of production. Brill's standard Open Access Article Publication Charge for a research article can be found here: <https://brill.com/page/2244?language=en> (for a policy & practice note a 50% reduction applies by default). Authors whose institutions are not in a position to cover these charges, can apply for a reduction or a waiver of these charges.

R&D's Article Processing Charges are embedded in a solidarity model that seeks to ensure both equitable access to published articles (by publishing the journal in Open Access) and equitable opportunities to publish. As outlined in the first issue's introductory article, R&D's Editorial Committee considered it non-negotiable to publish the journal in open access. To cover the journal's immediate publication costs, we hence have developed a solidarity model based on article processing charges. In some parts of the world, financing for open access publication is increasingly available, be it through specific open access funds, from project budgets or through institutional support. Those scholars that have access to such funding will be required to pay article processing charges for their articles. At the same time, it is the journal's firm policy that these costs should not be a hindrance for anyone wanting to publish in the journal. For those authors that are not able to pay the full article processing charges or who are not able to finance article processing charges at all, the article processing charges can be substantially reduced or waived.²

The Editorial Committee hence appeals to colleagues particularly to make use of their institutional, national or project funder's Open Access publication funds where such possibilities are available. Those scholars who do not have access to publication funding can request a reduction or waiver of the Article Publishing Charges upon submission. If in doubt or in case of any questions, do not hesitate to contact the Editorial Office: journal@religion-and-development.org.

Ethical and Legal Conditions

The publication of a manuscript in a peer-reviewed work is expected to follow standards of ethical behaviour for all parties involved in the act of publishing: authors, editors, and reviewers. Authors, editors, and reviewers should thoroughly acquaint themselves with Brill's publication ethics, which may be downloaded here: brill.com/page/ethics/publication-ethics-cope-compliance.

Instructions for Authors

Kindly submit your manuscript via e-mail to our editorial office: journal@religion-and-development.org.

Peer Review

Manuscripts submitted to R&D undergo rigorous peer review (except for book reviews, which are reviewed by the editors). After a first screening by the editorial office and the journal's editors regarding formalities, academic quality and suitability, each submission is sent to at least two expert reviewers for their assessment of the article (double anonymous). Authors will be requested to revise their contributions based on the reviewers' comments as well as remarks by the editors.

R&D is committed to ensuring transdisciplinarity, internationality and diversity in the review process. In terms of transdisciplinarity, it is the journal's policy that the reviews of an article are carried out from different disciplinary perspectives. One of these would typically be the same as the author's discipline. For policy & practice notes, at least one reviewer will have a policymaker's or practitioner's background. To ensure internationality, the journal aims to have the contributions reviewed by experts from different contexts. In terms of diversity, we, inter alia, aim to include both senior and junior scholars in the review process as well as ensuring diversity in terms of gender.

File Format

Please always e-mail or upload manuscripts as source files (such as .doc, .rtf, or .odt), as well as a pdf.

Submission Requirements

Types of Contributions and Length

R&D publishes research articles, policy & practice notes, and book reviews.

Research Articles

Research articles should provide high-quality, state-of-the-art contributions to the academic debate advancing the research in the field.

We encourage articles based on empirical research in all its forms, as well as those with conceptual or theoretical focus.

Research articles are fully peer reviewed (double anonymous).

A typical structure of a research article may include: an introduction, a literature review, an outline of the theoretical framework, a methods section, a section presenting analysis and results, a discussion section, and a conclusion.

Instructions for Authors

In light of the disciplinary and methodological diversity of the research published in R&D, authors are free to structure their manuscripts in accordance with the needs of their specific research approach. The structure should serve to increase the quality of the presentation of the research and the clarity of the argument. However, the basic three-tiered structure of introduction, main body and discussion should always be followed in order to ensure accessibility of all papers across the diverse readership of the journal.

Research articles should typically have a length of 6,000 to 8,000 words (excluding abstract and bibliography). If longer manuscripts are submitted, a justification should be provided.

Policy & Practice Notes

With the format of policy & practice notes, R&D seeks to foster knowledge exchange between academia, practice and policy. The content should be relevant for the religion and development debate and be of interest to both practitioners and scholars.

The nature of a policy & practice note is relatively flexible. Contributions can, for example, include:

- reflections on and lessons learned from specific programmes, projects or interventions,
- scoping studies and thorough mappings of specific themes,
- summaries of more comprehensive research publications or project results,
- contributions highlighting specific needs for research or action,
- essays of argumentative character or
- perspectives of local actors, religious communities or religious leaders.

It is essential that the article is well-written and well-structured, and the argumentation is both clear and coherent.

The reflective depth is a crucial evaluation criterion in the review process. Articles should not be merely descriptive in nature but provide a critical engagement with the material presented.

Kindly avoid advertising a specific organisation or religious community.

Citation of relevant documents and academic literature can be used but does not need to be extensive.

Policy & practice notes should include an abstract and 3 to 7 keywords. The length of the abstract should be between 100 and 250 words. It should briefly summarize the article and its implications. Kindly note that the abstract should be a standalone text and does not constitute an introduction. Consequently, the introduction needs to contain all the relevant information even without being preceded by the abstract.

Policy and practice articles are fully peer reviewed. Each submission will be reviewed (double anonymous) by a practitioner and a scholar.

Policy & practice notes should have a length of 2,000 to 4,000 words (excluding abstract and bibliography). If longer manuscripts are submitted, a justification should be provided.

Book Reviews

It is possible to have an initial conversation about potential book reviews with our book review editor, Barbara Bompani, the University of Edinburgh. Please, feel free to contact her directly at: B.Bompani@ed.ac.uk

How to prepare a book review:

Please do not use references or footnotes in a review, though they are allowed in a review article. When quoting from the book under review please always include a page number, in brackets after the quote, e.g. (p. 20). It is not necessary to give page numbers if not quoting directly.

The length of book reviews are usually between 800 and 1,000 words and 3,000 words for a review article (that usually discusses four titles).

Please head the review with the title of the book in bold, by (author). Place of publication: publisher, date of publication + page number. If applicable please also provide paper, hardback or e-book price and ISBN. For example:

Africa Works: The Political Instrumentalization of Disorder, by Patrick Chabal and Jean-Pascal Daloz. Bloomington, IN: James Currey and Indiana University Press, 1999. Pp.192. Paperback: $24.95, ISBN 0253212871.

Please end the review with your name, institutional affiliation and your e-mail address. It is our policy to print your e-mail address, unless you specifically ask us not to.

For example:

BARBARA BOMPANI

Center of African Studies,

The University of Edinburgh

B.Bompani@ed.ac.uk

If this is your first book review, this is what we are expecting in a good submission:

- A concise summary of the book's contents and any overarching argument. In case of an edited collection, please try to provide a summary around themes and do not simply list the contents of each chapter.
- There should be an overall assessment of the book.
- The book should be placed in the context of other work on the same subject.
- Criticism, when possible, should be tempered with positive comments.

Language

R&D accepts submissions in English. Spelling can follow British English (preferred) or American English but should be consistent throughout. To ensure a smooth review process, we kindly ask all authors to ensure that their manuscripts are proofread before submission and adhere to the referencing style guidelines. The journal has a strict non-discrimination policy. We kindly ask all authors to use inclusive language. Discriminatory language will lead to the rejection of an article.

Instructions for Authors

Fonts and Non-Roman Scripts

Any non-Roman font used must be embedded in the word file.

For more information on handling non-Roman scripts, please see the sections on the Brill website online on fonts, Unicode, and special scripts: brill.com/page/fonts/fonts-scripts-and-unicode.

Authors should avoid excessive inclusion of textual passages in original languages.

Fonts and Unicode: brill.com/fileasset/downloads_static/static_fonts_latinipaunicodelist.pdf.

Manuscript Structure

For questions of style, authors should consult the Chicago Manual of Style, 17th Edition (Chapters 5 to 13). See chicagomanualofstyle.org/home.html.

Although the first submission of a paper does not necessitate that it entirely follow the journal style, revised submissions must be entirely correct, including numbered headings, and the correct reference style; short references in the footnotes; a complete bibliography at the end of the paper, and the correct form of pagination.

Abstract and Keywords

Research articles and policy & practice notes should contain a short abstract of 100–250 words and a list of 3 to 7 keywords.

Headings

Authors may use up to three levels of numbered headings. All are presented flush left.

First-level headings (1) are formatted in bold and appear with two blank lines above and one below. Second-level headings (1.1) are formatted in bold italics and appear with one blank line above and none below.

Third-level headings (1.1.1) are formatted in Roman and appear with one blank line above and none below.

The main words of all headings begin with a capital letter (headline style).³

³ See The Chicago Manual of Style, 17th Edition, Sections 8.159 to 8.162.

The conventions of headline style are governed mainly by emphasis and grammar. The following rules, though occasionally arbitrary, are intended primarily to facilitate the consistent styling of titles mentioned or cited in text and notes:

1. Capitalize the first and last words in titles and subtitles (but see rule 7), and capitalize all other major words (nouns, pronouns, verbs, adjectives, adverbs, and some conjunctions—but see rule 4).
2. Lowercase the articles the, a, and an.
3. Lowercase prepositions, regardless of length, except when they are used adverbially or adjectivally (up in Look Up, down in Turn Down, on in The On Button, to in Come To, etc.) or when they compose part of a Latin expression used adjectivally or adverbially (De Facto, In Vitro, etc.).
4. Lowercase the common coordinating conjunctions and, but, for, or, and nor.
5. Lowercase to not only as a preposition (rule 3) but also as part of an infinitive (to Run, to Hide, etc.), and lowercase as in any grammatical function.

1 The First Level Heading

The text.

1.1 The Second Level Heading

1.1.1 The Third Level Heading

The text.

Abbreviations and Acronyms

Abbreviations and acronyms should only be used if the abbreviated term is used multiple times in the manuscript. In the abstract, abbreviations and acronyms should only be used in exceptional cases.

Bibliography

R&D uses in text citations according to The Chicago Manual of Style (17th ed.) Author-Date referencing style. There should be a complete bibliography (reference list including all works cited) at the end of the manuscript. Please refer to chicagomanualofstyle.org/tools_citationguide/citation-guide-2.html or to Chapter 15 in The Chicago Manual of Style. 2017. 17th ed. Chicago, London: The University of Chicago Press.

Figures

Figures refer to graphs, charts, drawings, and pictures. All figures must be cited in the text. The author is responsible for obtaining any permissions needed in order to use a figure or table. Any figures must be uploaded as separate figure files.

These files must be uploaded as source files (.jpeg, or .tif), and not .pdfs. If there are figures in colour, there must also be a black and white file for each figure. The size of the figure must be appropriate for the journal, which is 11.5 x 18 cm.

The quality of the figure must be suitable for printing—the resolution should be a minimum of 300 dpi (minimum 600 dpi for line art). The image itself must be sharp, and any text in the figure should be legible (at least corps 9 or larger). Please also provide a separate list of figure captions.

6. Lowercase the part of a proper name that would be lowercased in text, such as de or von.
 7. Lowercase the second part of a species name, such as fulvescens in Acipenser fulvescens, even if it is the last word in a title or subtitle'. (The Chicago Manual of Style, Section 8.159: Principles of headline-style capitalization, chicagomanualofstyle.org/book/ed17/part2/ch08/psec159.html).

Instructions for Authors

It is the author's responsibility to deal with any eventual permissions concerning the reproduction of any figures; please see point 6 of the Ethical and Legal Conditions above.

Tables

When printed, tables have no hairlines. Keep any formatting to a minimum, and the size to 11.5 x 18 cm.

Block Quotations

Quotations of 40 words and longer can be formatted as block quotations. Indent on the left side, but not on the right. It should be the same size font as the rest of the text. Cite the quote by using a footnote number, or directly under the quotation, without putting the source into parenthesis.

Publication

Proofs

Upon acceptance, a PDF of the article proofs will be sent to authors by e-mail to check carefully for factual and typographic errors. Authors are responsible for checking these proofs and are strongly urged to make use of the Comment & Markup toolbar to note their corrections directly on the proofs. At this stage in the production process only minor corrections are allowed. Alterations to the original manuscript at this stage will result in considerable delay in publication and, therefore, are not accepted unless charged to the author. Proofs should be returned promptly.

License to Publish

Open Access

The author(s) keep full copyright and give Brill permission to publish by signing a special Brill Open Consent to Publish. The Brill Open Consent to Publish will be sent to you by the responsible desk-editor. For more information on Brill Open go to: brill.com/brillopen or contact brillopen@brill.com.
